* Dreamweaver CS4 includes a streamlined version of Photoshop CS5, but it's only partially compatible with Photoshop CS5. Create Vector Graphics in Illustrator Artists have used vector graphics for centuries. The name comes from the format used, which was based on mathematical expressions rather than photographic images. A vector image is constructed with separate shapes that can be altered and moved, modified and grouped together. The SVG format was used as an alternative to the raster-based SVG format, which is introduced in the next chapter. The Illustrator program can help with creating both raster-based and vector graphics. To create a vector graphic in Illustrator, follow these steps: 1. Open the document that you'd like to use as a vector graphic. 2. Choose File → Save For Web (If you have a file open, choose File→Save.) In the dialog box that appears, select the Save for Web tab, as shown on the left in Figure 2-3. Alternatively, you can click the gear icon and choose Save for Web from the File menu. The SVG format is now the default option, and the SVG file extension is used to identify the format. You can also save for print in the JPEG format. However, to produce the best results from a print-based SVG image, you should use the Enhanced mode, rather than the standard mode. 3. In the resulting dialog box, select the Enhanced option and click the Save button. You can use the Type option to choose a raster format that you prefer for print, as shown on the right in Figure 2-3. 4. Click OK. FIGURE 2-3: You can save graphics for the Web with either a raster or vector format. Creating a Raster (Bitmap) File With the rapidly increasing power of computer processing technology, a rise of high-resolution digital cameras, and the ability to zoom in for a greater level of detail, a graphics designer can easily create a photo-quality image that can look crisp even at small sizes. Q: Javascript to validate dynamic form inputs I have multiple form elements on a page. I have them bound to a javascript function so that the user can select the form element he is trying to validate and then press Enter. For example, if the user presses Enter while a form element is highlighted, then I call a function called something like validateElementId(id). If a form element with the id="id" is valid, then I can hide the form element or do whatever with the results. If a form element with an id="id" is invalid then I want to show an alert with the error message associated with that form element. Here is the code I have: var elements = document.getElementsByClassName("input"); for (var i = 0, l = elements.length; i < l; i++) { elements[i].addEventListener("keypress", function(e) { if (e.key === "Enter") { validateElementId(this.id); } }); } Q: What is the best way to ensure people are aware of and use a bit of text in their code?
