Q: php - why not a static echo inside a normal echo function so i am trying to understand why the following code doesn't work: the reason i want to use the static keyword is to be able to access the $var from inside the function without using global. i created a jsfiddle here. A: static variables are single-instance variables. They only can be accessed from the file in which they were defined. From the PHP manual: To make a variable static, you simply declare it, and it can be referenced anywhere within the scope of the code without having to first initialize it to a value. In your case, you have defined a variable called $var, but you have not defined any scope in which you can reference the variable. Q: Where are the studies for the Wire Strain Gauge? Some of the materials I have found to be used for the wire strain gauge seem to come from Consumer Reports, but I have not found any studies
