Technetium-99m (Tc-99m) aerosols provide unique, quantitative dynamic data on the pulmonary airways by extrapolation of the rate of count loss in lung after deposition. Tc-99m-labeled perfluorocarbons produce similar information for the pulmonary parenchyma but at a slower rate. In addition, measurements of ventilation are possible by calculating the rate of decrease in Tc-99m-labeled gas uptake into the alveolar space. Because Tc-99m is an indirect label (the particles are biologically inert), there are no radiation hazards in routine lung imaging and the range of conditions in which Tc-99m aerosols are well tolerated is broad. The degree of linearity and precision of these measurements are high, and the radiopharmaceutical does not materially affect ventilation in the lungs of normal subjects or those with obstructive or restrictive airway disease. The only significant artifact is seen in patients with lung disease in which the lungs are heter e79ca774b
